Definition of the domestic credit rating

The credit ratings of corporate bonds are classified into 10 grades, ranging from AAA to D, depending on the ability to pay principal and interest. Among the grades, AAA to BBB are investment grades that are approved for their ability to repay principal and interest, while BB to C are classified as speculative grades that are significantly affected by environmental changes.

Rating	Definition
AAA	The party has the best ability to repay principal and interest.
AA	The party has the outstanding ability to repay principal and interest, but its grade is somewhat inferior to AAA bonds.
A	Although the party has the good ability to repay principal and interest, its grade is more susceptible to economic conditions and environmental deterioration than the higher grades.
BBB	Although the party has the satisfactory ability to repay principal and interest, but its ability to repay principal and interest deteriorate and fall due to economic conditions and environmental changes.
BB	The party lacks the ability to repay principal and interest, and it is uncertain whether it will be able to repay interest during a recession.
CCC	The party carries the factors of uncertainty for the payment of principal and interest, and since it is at a high risk of default on its obligations, it is highly speculative.
